Early Life and Rise to Stardom

Born into poverty in Cadíz, Ohio, in 1901, Gable's humble beginnings shaped his unwavering determination to succeed. After a brief stint as an oil worker, he stumbled upon acting and quickly rose through the ranks. In 1931, his breakthrough role as Rhett Butler in "Gone with the Wind" catapulted him to international fame.

Harris delves into Gable's early career, exploring his struggles and triumphs on Broadway and in early Hollywood films. He paints a vivid picture of the young actor's relentless pursuit of his dreams and the challenges he faced along the way.

Hollywood's Golden Boy

Gable's star power reached its zenith in the 1930s and '40s. He became a fixture in romantic comedies, adventure films, and epic dramas, sharing the screen with some of Hollywood's most iconic actresses, including Joan Crawford, Greta Garbo, and Vivien Leigh.

Harris provides an intimate glimpse into Gable's personal life, including his six marriages and his tumultuous relationships with actresses such as Carole Lombard and Ava Gardner. The author deftly balances the glamour and excitement of Gable's Hollywood life with the complexities and scandals that surrounded him.

Wartime Hero and Veteran

Gable's career was interrupted by World War II, during which he served with distinction as an aerial combat photographer. Harris подробно описывает военный опыт Гейбла, подчеркивая его отвагу, патриотизм и неизменное чувство долга.

The biography also explores Gable's return to Hollywood after the war, as he struggled to regain his former glory amidst a changing industry. Harris provides a nuanced analysis of Gable's postwar career, shedding light on his successes and failures.
