In her new book, The Grassroots Revolution That's Transforming Education, author Sarah Lahm profiles 10 of these schools. She tells the stories of educators who are using creative approaches to teaching and learning, and who are building strong communities around their schools.

Lahm's book is a powerful reminder that education is not a one-size-fits-all proposition. Schools need to be tailored to the specific needs of their students and communities. And the best way to do that is to empower educators to make decisions at the local level.

The schools profiled in Lahm's book are all different, but they share a common goal: to create a more just and equitable education system. They are schools where all students are welcome, regardless of their background or abilities. And they are schools where teachers are respected and supported.

The Grassroots Revolution That's Transforming Education is a must-read for anyone who cares about the future of education. It's a book that will inspire you to believe that change is possible.

Here are some of the inspiring stories you'll find in the book:

- The story of a school in New Orleans that was rebuilt after Hurricane Katrina. The school is now a thriving community center that offers a variety of programs and services to students and families.
- The story of a school in California that is using project-based learning to engage students in their learning. Students at the school are working on projects that are relevant to their lives and communities.
- The story of a school in Massachusetts that is using restorative justice practices to create a more positive school climate. The school has seen a decrease in suspensions and expulsions, and students are more engaged in their learning.

These are just a few of the inspiring stories you'll find in The Grassroots Revolution That's Transforming Education. This book is a must-read for anyone who cares about the future of education.
