In 1966, George married Pattie Boyd. I was heartbroken, but I knew that George would always be my friend. I continued to see him regularly, and we often talked about music, life, and love. One evening, George played me a song that he had written for Pattie. It was called "Something," and it was one of the most beautiful songs I had ever heard. I knew that George was a special person, and I was proud to call him my friend.

Chapter 2: The Crossroads

In 1969, George met Eric Clapton. Eric was a brilliant guitarist, and he quickly became one of George's closest friends. The two of them spent countless hours together, playing music and talking about life. One day, Eric told George that he was in love with Pattie. George was shocked and heartbroken, but he knew that he could not stand in the way of their happiness. He gave Eric his blessing, and the two of them were married in 1979.

I was happy for George and Eric, but I was also sad to see them go. I had always hoped that George and I would end up together, but it was not to be. I knew that I had to move on with my life, but it was hard to let go of the past.

Chapter 3: Finding My Own Way

After George and Eric got married, I started to date other people. I met a lot of interesting men, but none of them compared to George. I was starting to think that I would never find love again. Then, one day, I met a man named Ronnie Wood. Ronnie was a guitarist in the Rolling Stones, and he was everything that I had ever wanted in a man. He was funny, intelligent, and kind. I fell in love with him quickly, and we were married in 1985.

I am so grateful for the love that I have found with Ronnie. He is my best friend, my soulmate, and the love of my life. I feel like I have finally found the happiness that I have always been looking for.
